Storage

Meat, Fish and Poultry Temperature Control

Raw and cooked meat, fish and poultry may carry bacteria and therefore it is essential to restrict the growth and spread of harmful bacteria that could be present. It is essential that fridges and freezers are running at the correct temperatures at all times. This also means that we need to pay attention to temperature all the way along the food chain, especially as it enters our own refrigerated storage. It is important to ensure that commercial meat and fish fridges recover temperature quickly and efficiently following loading and when used in warm and humid kitchens.

Be mindful that different meats, fish and poultry will require different storage temperatures, just like they need different cooking temperatures. Lower temperatures will often keep raw products safe and in perfect condition for longer.

With the wealth of fresh local produce available to us, Everlasting ensure that all of their PROFESSIONAL GREEN stainless steel door upright and counter fridges will operate efficiently (Energy Class A) between -2⁰C and +10⁰C in ambient conditions up to +43⁰C ensuring raw meat, poultry, wet fish and sushi can be held safely all year round.
